Tangiwai: A Love Story

Drama

It's 1953. Bob Blair and 19 year-old Nerissa Love are deeply in love. Their love story alone is the stuff of movies, but what makes Bob and Nerissa's story one of legends is that catastrophic events will cause their private love story to play out its final scene on an unlikely public stage.

While Bob goes off to represent New Zealand at cricket in South Africa, Nerissa makes a fateful decision to travel to Auckland to be with her friend for Christmas. While Bob smashes wickets in Johannesburg, the train Nerissa is on heads straight for a bridge that spans the Whangaehu River – a place better known to most New Zealanders as Tangiwai.

The Tangiwai disaster remains one of our most heart-wrenching and powerful New Zealand stories. Tangiwai explores a national tragedy through the eyes of two young people who embody all the hope of the post-war generation, a generation who were desperate to forge a new, independent path for their nation.

Director: Charlie Haskell / Written by: Paula Boock and Donna Malane / Starring:

Ryan O'Kane as Bob Blair, Rose McIver as Nerissa Love, Iain O'Brien as Neil Adcock, Dean O'Gorman as Bert Sutcliffe, Jed Brophy as Dick Brittenden, Mabelle Dennison as Kui Wai

The Tree

Drama

After the sudden death of her husband, Dawn must face her own mourning yet still care for her four children. Her only daughter, 8 year old Simone, seems to take the loss the hardest of all.

Simone shares a special secret with her mother: her father whispers to her through the leaves of the magnificent tree next to their home.

Convinced he's come back to protect the family, Simone spends more and more time up in the tree, speaking with her father. Soon, Dawn herself is mesmerized by the tree's commanding presence. When Dawn becomes more intimate with George, her employer, the bond between mother and daughter is threatened. With branches infiltrating the house and roots destroying the foundations, the tree seems to be siding with Simone. Fearful the tree is in danger of being cut down, she protests by setting up house high up in the branches.

But Dawn refuses to let the tree take control of her family...
