Tango and Cash meets
Laurel and Hardy

Jovita

There is certainly a easy chemistry between Kevin Spacey and Daniel Wu. This is one of those great partnerships that has a bit of all partners preceding them, from Batman and Robin to Holmes and Watson, to Shrek and Donkey and even Cassidy and Sundance! An entertaining story with an interesting twist at the end.

This is a movie that encourages you to find your inner strength. Li (Daniel Wu) Jackie has a lot going on in his life and mostly not good. He has come to his wits end and has chosen to end his life, which is interrupted by Chuck (Kevin Spacey). Chuck befriends Li and decides to show him a different view of life and the world and they go on crazy adventures with each other. Then again, who really is Chuck?

Twisty...

This is a lively and entertaining story at the beginning but ends with a major twist. I like the chemistry established between Daniel Wu and Kevin Spacey as it fits well in this movie.

A crossover film of East meet West. A funny story of Chuck who is an American expat (Kevin Spacey), guides a depressed engineer Li (Daniel Wu) to a super hero, to fight crime and anti-corruption.

Led by Li's suicide attempt, I first think he has a weaker personality. But I have been totally wrong by making the early assumption. He COULD actually transform and stand up for fairness when the right situation comes at the right time. Played by Daniel Wu who used to play stronger and wittier characters (say in "New Police Story" and "Shinjuku Incident" he starred opposite Jackie Chan, or in "Triple Tap" with Louis Koo), Li is a less in control of his life while the American neighbour Chuck (Spacey) becomes his wise friend who boosts Li's confidence. The challenge of this emotionally disturbed hero is yet to be overcome and the audience is given enough hints to go through his journey of a bizarre discovery.
